Major rail disruption between Walsall and Birmingham following tree fall

Major disruption to train services between Walsall and Birmingham is expected on Easter Monday following damage to overhead power lines near Bescot Stadium.

No services are currently able to run on the route and road replacement transport will be in operation.

The line blockage is also affecting services between Walsall and Rugeley Trent Valley where only a very limited train service is able to run, supplemented by road transport.

A tree fell onto power lines at around 8.15pm on Easter Sunday, causing significant damage.

Network Rail engineers are working to fix the issue as quickly as possible but West Midlands Railway is advising customers that repairs are likely to take until at least Easter Monday afternoon and they should check their journeys before setting out.

Passengers are reminded that in line with government advice on containment of the coronavirus epidemic, only essential journeys are permitted. See www.wmr.uk/coronavirus for more.
