

The initiative has been launched by station adopters from The Berkswell Society, who hope to engage with travellers and create a warm welcome for commuters.

Over 150 books are now available for passengers to freely borrow or keep.

People are also encouraged to donate used books in return to keep the shelves stocked with a fresh offering.

Volunteers from The Berkswell Society have been involved at the station since spring 2017. The group have been maintaining planters on the platforms, and the library is their latest venture to engage with the local community

Andrew Burrow, secretary of The Berkswell Society and a parish councillor, said: “The station is an important part of our community life and we are glad to be able to provide a facility which, alongside the station planters our volunteers put in two years ago, adds a little more life and colour to railway journeys. The library is open to everyone who uses the station, so we encourage people to get involved and pick up a new book for their journey.”

Fay Easton, head of stakeholder and community for West Midlands Railway said: ‘Our volunteers have done a wonderful job collating the library and setting it up for our passengers at Berkswell. It has brightened up the waiting area and has created a talking point for those waiting for their train to arrive. The project follows the successful launch of a library in a telephone box on Old Waste Lane near Balsall Common in the summer of 2017, and it’s great to see a similar venture make its way onto the railway.’

West Midlands Railway is looking to facilitate community engagement at every one of its 114 stations across the region. The train operator already supports over 150 station adopters, who create planters, support local arts projects and find new and innovative ways of using the space available at stations to engage with their local area.
