Passengers urged to plan ahead as London Northwestern Railway confirms Christmas timetable

London Northwestern Railway (LNR) is warning of significant disruption and urging passengers travelling over the festive period to plan ahead amidst ongoing industrial action.

The train operator has published revised timetables due to ongoing industrial action.

The RMT union has announced its intention to stage action short of strike (a ban on overtime) between Sunday 18 December and Monday 2 January 2023 inclusive. Disruption is expected across all of these days and trains may be subject to on the day changes or short notice cancellations.

- A reduced service will be in operation on Friday and Saturday (16/17 Dec) between 7.30am and 6.30pm on certain routes and some routes will have no service.
- Services will run until 4pm on Christmas Eve.
- There will be no service on any LNR route on Christmas Day and Boxing Day.
- A limited service will run on Sunday 18 December and New Year's Day.

The TSSA union has announced its intention to stage strike action on Wednesday 28 December and Thursday 29 December. The impact of this action on LNR services is currently being assessed.

Jonny Wiseman, LNR customer experience director, said:

“I am sorry that our passengers’ journeys will continue to be affected by industrial action during the Christmas period. We expect services to be busier across the rail network as a result of other train operators also being affected by industrial action.

“Our advice to passengers is to prepare for disruption across the Christmas period and check journeys carefully before travelling, as trains may be subject to short-notice changes.

“Anyone whose train is cancelled as a result of industrial action can claim a full refund from their point of purchase or travel on an alternative date.”
